

CAMBRIDGE-INET, UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE, AND CENTRE FOR MACROECONOMICS

CONFERENCE ON
“Aggregate Demand, the Labor Market and Macroeconomic Policy”
Cambridge (UK), 4-5 September 2014

In the aftermath of the recent financial crisis a number of policy issues have been brought at the center stage of both policy debates and academic research. This conference aims to bring together some of the recent papers on the topics listed below.

The conference organizers welcome submissions of a theoretical or empirical nature. Relevant topics include but are not limited to:

1. The interactions between aggregate demand and the labor market; jobless recoveries; and the macroeconomic implications of long-term unemployment.
2. Macroeconomic policies in times of a crisis; debt consolidation; and sovereign risk.
3. Fiscal and monetary policy in a liquidity trap; macroeconomic implications of low real interest rates.
4. Asset prices and their interactions with aggregate economic activity, labor markets and policy.

Participation has been confirmed by: Robert Hall (Stanford, plenary speaker), George-Marios Angeletos (MIT and University of Zurich), Gabriel Chodorow-Reich (Harvard), Wouter den Haan (LSE), Guido Lorenzoni (Northwestern), Atif Mian (Princeton), Victor Rios-Rull (Minnesota) and Edouard Schaal (NYU).

The conference organizers are: Giancarlo Corsetti (Cambridge University and CEPR); Greg Kaplan (Princeton University and NBER); Pontus Rendahl (Cambridge University and CEPR).

The conference will be held at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, UK.

The deadline for applying is April 30, 2014

Authors will be notified of the final program by May 31, 2014

Travel expenses and accommodation is covered for academic participants presenting or acting as discussants.

Interested participants should submit their paper (or abstract if no paper is available) to cambridge.conference2014@gmail.com
